

Realizing that I looked at it all wrong

I realized that the best way of motivating myself was of me thinking a certain way

Not by pointing fingers about how bad I am at doing things or how I can't motivate myself on my own or anything like that it was me making myself believe that this is a challenge, an obstacle made by brainless maniacs who had no idea what I could do, who doubted my ability to do what I wanted to motivate myself to do

Only then did I start taking the project seriously again and even added things that I would've added if I was way more passionate about it instead of doing the same thing over and over